FOETRY.

Has wrapped in flames leaf, herb and flower.

Till roses languish in the bower and stricken liles swoon away;

When lawn and close are wan and dry, And life is abbing to an end. Comes, hovering softly, Night, the friend. To succor and revivity.

From her coel fingers drops the dew.

Beneath her shroud tired nature sleeps.

Till up to meet the dawn, she leaps,
Hope, strength and gladness born

LADY BUTTON-EYES.

When the busy day is done.

And my weary little one
Rocketh gently to and fro;
When the night winds softly blow,
And the crickets in the gien
Chirp and chirp and chirp again,
When upon the haunted green
Fairles dance around their queen—
Then from yonder misty skies
Cometh Lady Button-Eyes.

Through the murk and mist and gloam

To our quiet, cosy home,
Where to singing, sweet and low,
Rocks a crafile to and fro;
Where the clock's dull monotone
Telisth of the day that's done;
Whore the menheams hower oer
Playthings sleeping on the floor—
Where my weary wee one lies
Cometh Lady Button-Eyes.

Cometh like a fleeting ghost From some distant serie coast, Never footfall can you hear As that spirit fareth near— Never whisper, never word. From that shadow-queen is heard. In ethereal raiment light From the realm of ray and sprite, In the depth of yonder akies Cometh Lady Button-Eyes.

Layeth she her hands upon
My dear weary little one.
And those white bands overspread
Like a vell the curly head,
Seem to fondle and caress
Every little silken tress;
Then she smooths the eyelids down
Over those two eyes of brownIn such soothing, tender wise
Cometh Lady Button-Eyes.

Dearest, feel upon your brow
That caressing magic now:
For the crickets in the glen
Chirp and chirp and chirp again.
While upon the haunted green
Fairles dance around their queen,
And the monbeams hover ofer
Playthings sleeping on the floor—
Hush, my sweet! from yonder skies
Cometh Lady Button-Eyes.

Honoring the Oldest Citizen. There is a new form of competition among New Hampshire towns. It is the custom well up toward the Canadian line for the own to present the oldest citizen a gold-headed cane. Colebrook has started the competition Colebrook has started the competition by handing the cane to a man of 92 years and also claiming to be the birthplace of the oldest citizen in the next town who leans upon the badge of honor there. Thus rivairy started, of honor there. Thus rivary started, and in the future it may become an important point that towns will try to have their oldest citizens develop from native stock, that other towns may not reach over the borders and claim part of the glory of longevity. That must necessarily lead to a town sustaining such a condition of sanitation taining such a condition of sanitation that its citizens would live longer and stay there in preference to moving outside. With that principle well applied this country would have larger population in the towns and less in the cities in proportion. The farms would improve in value because of the greater disposition to remain on them. It is notable that in almost every instance the man carrying the gold-headed came as the oldest citizen in a town is a farmer and one who has worked hard all his long life. Thus the sustaining badge of honor is worth all the more because of the proof that a busy life is the longest.—

Joe lanningan, the man with many experiences, does a routine of clever stories which are delivered in a dry, humorous manier, alwafs making a hit. His appearance on the stage is the signal for langhter which is confinued throughout his act.

Mr. Dan Tracey, a funny Irish comedian of the type of Johany Ray, does a very clever comedy skit in which he is very ably essisted by Miss Emma Burnett.

A lively dancer and a strong female baritone singer go to make up the team of Connors and Edna, who introduce an original line of talk and catchy songs which go to make up as seal as act of its kind as has been seen here this season.
